To most Metropolitans, Lex Luthor is a beloved billionaire philanthropist—but Superman knows better! Beneath Luthor's businessman façade lurks a master criminal whose empire, LexCorp, maintains illegitimate interests worldwide. Luthor hates Superman for "stealing" his position as the most powerful man in Metropolis and has dedicated his life to finding some way to turn the Man of Tomorrow into yesterday's news!

In the world of 2030, Monarch is another word for menace! Though Earth's future seems bright and wonderful and filled with technological advances undreamed of by modern man, the the citizens of 2030 pay a terrible price for their utopia: their lives are ruled by the all-seeing, all-knowing tyrant called Monarch! According to legend, this depraved despot was once one of Earth's heroes—no one was sure exactly which one—and had, by the end of the new century's first decade, turned evil, slaying all of Earth's super-powered champions and declaring himself ruler!

Synopsis: A tireless figure speeds through the night, desperately racing against the clock to save a man's life! So begins the very first Superman story, a tale in which the Man of Steel bursts onto the scene by snatching an innocent man from the grim grasp of the electric chair in the very nick of time! Still more deeds await the Metropolis Marvel, including the rescue of reporter Lois Lane from a band of kidnapping gangsters—a feat mild-mannered newsman Clark Kent reports the next day on the front page of the Daily Star! Though everyone marvels at Kent's uncanny ability to get the "inside story" on Superman, no one suspects his true secret—that the two men are, in reality, one and the same!

Their only hope lies in Palmer himself—or, rather, in the secret shrinking ray he'd crafted from a chunk of white dwarf star! Stealing away, the physicist trains the shrinking lens on himself—and, in seconds, he dwindles down to six-inch size, the cavern prison looming large above him! At his new height, however, he takes advantage of footholds too small for normal use and creates an exit through which all can escape! Later, incorporating his secret lens into a tiny costume tailored from white dwarf material, Palmer decides to use its microelectronic controls to become the Atom—the World's Smallest Super-Hero!

"We have your sign," said Thorvin. He held out a pendant on a silver chain. Shef looked at it curiously: a shaft, with five rungs sticking out from it on alternate sides.

"What is it?"

"It is a kraki," replied Thorvin. "A pole-ladder. It is the sign of Rig."

"I have never heard the name of that god. What can you tell me about him that should make me wear his sign?"

"He is the god of climbers. Of wanderers. He is mighty not through himself but through his children. He is the father of Thrall, of Carl, of Jarl. And of others."

"You have to do it one rung at a time," replied Thorvin.

"Hard to climb, difficult to balance, to reach the top. But at the top there are two rungs to grasp on to. One opposite the other. It could almost be a cross."

Thorvin frowned. "Rig and his sign were known in the ages before there ever was a cross. It is not a sign of death. No. It is one of reaching higher, of living better."

Shef smiled, the first time he had done that for many days. "I like your sign, Thorvin," he said. "I will wear it." He slipped the Wayman's pendant round his neck, turned and looked at the misted sea.
